BY J. PIEPONT.

Was it the chime of a tiny bell; That came so sweet to my dreaming ear-

Like the silvery tones of a fairy's shell That the winds on the beach so mellow and clear When the winds and the waves listogether asleep, And the moon and the Fairy are watching the deep, She dispensing her silvery light,

And he, his notes as silvery quite, While the boatman lightens and ships his oar, To catch the music that comes from the shore? Hark! the notes, on my ear that play, Are set to words-as they float they say, "Passing away! passing away!"

But no! it was not a fairy's shell, Blown on the beach, so mellow and clear; Nor was it the tongue of a silver bell, Striking the hour, that filled my car, As I lay in my dream; yet was it a chime I had told of the flow of the stream of time: For a beautiful clock from the ceiling hung, And a plump little girl, for a pendulum swung, (As you have sometimes seen in a little ring That hangs in his cage, a Canary bird swing,) And she held in her bosom a budding boquet, And as she enjoyed it, she seemed to say, "Passing away! passing away!"

O how bright were the wheels, that told Of the lapse of time as they moved round slow And the hands, as they swept o'er the dial of gold, Seemed to point to the girl below. And lot she had changed-in a few short hours Her boquet had become a garland of flowers That she held in her outstretched hands and flung This way and that, as she, dancing, swung In the fulness of grace and of womanly pride That told me she soon was to be a bride; Yet, then, when expecting her happiest day, In the same sweet voice I heard her say, "Passing away! passing away!"

THE VICTIM.

What a spectacle has this interview presented. The tender, delicate woman soothing the anguish of her husband's bosom, and then herself at last giving way beneath this terible stroke of Providence. Poor thing! little does she dream of the misery in store for her. Hope soon revived in her bosom; the forced calmness of her husband deceived her; she felt, too that her voice ought to support instead of disheartening him, and before I left them she went so far as to smile. And thus they mutually strove to re-assure each other, while the heart of both were -God knows-almost breaking.

Sanguine as I was, I had entered the cell with the expectation of seeing Howard speedily released, but when his sweet wife departed on a momentary errand, I seized the occasion to enquire more minutely into the probable reason of his arrest. He looked up and shook his head as I closed my question with expressing a belief in his speedy liberty. There was something frightfully calmin his deep, slow note, as he said, "It will never be. While Mary was here I was willing to deceive you; for I would not crush her gentle heart with the whole truth. No-it will never be. He has sworn-yes, the author of all my rain has sworn," he continued, with a hurried voice and kindling eye, "that I shall rot in fail -ha! ha! those are the very words, he added wildly; but instantly pausing, he placed his hands to his brow, with a look of unutterable agony, and resumed. "But why is this? I must learn to bear it like a man. No--as there is a Maker over me- seemed, however, to recall him to himself. he shall never know he can so affect my spirit. 1 "But this is useless," he said, and why should tion-yes persecution!" he added bitterly-and then once more mastering his emotions he resumed more calmly-"well you know R-, you know also my speculations with him and that terrible bond. I will not rehearse the progress of the drama-the doubts, the fears, the momentary ecstacy, and the agony of final ruin. No- these you know-fool that I was to bring them on me. Well-on Saturday the bubble burst. Mad with ruin, I hurried tomy partner, expecting to find some consolation in his often promised friendship. I knew his character for acuteness, and I dreamed fondly that he might yet point out some way to save ourselves. Nor did I argue unfairly, for was he not interested as well as I? Full of these thoughts I allighted at his house with something of hope. I was told he could not see me. Astonished beyond measure I told the man to carry in my name. He smiled and shook his head. I grew angry, and pushing by him entered the library, followed closely by the servant. R --- was sitting calmly by the fire. He rose at my entrance and turned frowning to the servant. Half suspecting the truth from the insolence of the footman, and my partner's air of perfect unconcern, I at once said, perhaps too harshly,

"Pray, Mr. R .---, order that fellow out of the room. I have some private business to transact with you, and observing he besitated, I added firmly and with emphasis, "'I must and will be heard."

"Well sir," said he coldly, at once crushing every hope by his tone, what may it be. But stop, I have some business with you"-said he suddenly, as if conscious of my errand, he had determined to meet me boldly by first broaching the subject, and enjoying a hellish revenge for the insult in resisting his porter and penetrating to his presencevou have heard of the failure of the land commany, and as that security is now worth nothing, you must be aware that I shall have to look in other quarters for the proceeds of my judgment bond. I presume, sir,' said he ironically, 'this is your object in calling.""

' For a moment I was struck dumb. Had I been told an hour before that human nature was capable of such baseness, I would unbesitatingly given it the lie. I could not find words to express my emotions. I gazed at him in mingled amazement, incredulity and horror. But in every feature of his face I traced the same cold-blooded irony which characterized his tone. I could not contain my-

By heaven, sir, this is too much. Do you tannt me with the ruin you have brought upon me?" You know well enough that I have no security besides that cursed tract of land which your own promises seduced me into purchasing. I give you security-I-I?

"Yes-you," he interposed coolly, "for if I did tell you to parchase, I did not bid you to hold on like a fool, when every one could see the speculation was about to blow up."

"You did, sir, you did," I broke in, almost choked with passion, 'no later than last week you induced me to refuse a bid. And now to taunt me with it," and as a scornful smile-the most galling of all insults for an injured man to bear-stole across his sinister countenance, I continued in words hoarse with rage, and with a perfect recklessness as to the consequences. 'You heary scoundrel-you have conspired-trapped me into this net-you have swindled one victim more-"

"By God!" said he, stung out of his affected irony, and trembling in every limb with anger,-'you shall suffer for this-by all that is holy, I swear you shall. I have you fast, you shall rot in jail for your insolence," and unable to proceed farther, he leaned against the mantel piece breath-

' I know not what I answered. 'The consciousness of my situation, and of the being I had to deal with swept across my memory, until my brain reeled again with agony. Despair for a moment took possession of me, and I felt tempted to rush upon the old villain, and make his life the forfeit of his taunt. But then other and better thoughts came across me. I remembered Mary, and it softened me at once. I beheld, too, the abyss over which I hung, and that my only hope was in not urging my oppressor farther. God only knows how I was enabled so suddenly to calm my passion; but a thunderbolt, believe me, sobers us at once. Yet I would not crouch to the hoary tyrant. He seemed, however, to fear personal violence, for he shouted continually for the servants, who soon came hurrying to the apartment, to turn me from the house. I felt I could have put aside the whole six, so unnatural was my excitement, and I only smiled disdainfully, as I picked up my hat, and striding through the very midst of them, passed out at a door opposite to the one where I had entered-the servants making room for me carefully as I passed. I have done. You know the rest .-You know that I instructed my lawyer to tender every thing I had as soon as proceedings should be commenced. Well as I knew I had incurred my partner's unmitigated enuity, I did not dream he would carry it thus far. But that delusion is over. God of heaven! I must rot in jail.'

I was awed by the intense agony of the tone h used; for it told the fearful nature of his sufferings. Yet what could I say? I felt there was no hope Still I determined to sooth him, even if I did so at the expense of truth. I used every effort to put a better light upon his case, and held out expectations which I felt could never be realized. At last he interrupted me.

'No-no,' he exclaimed bitterly, 'it cannot be. There is no hope. Here is my dwelling-here too shall be my grave. Oh! my God, what is the justice of this world. To be shut out from all you love, buried in a gloomy cell like this, and condemned to drag out a worthless life without ever seeing the sun rise, hearing the birds sing, or feeling the breath of heaven; and all this because you have committed the crime of being poor-is it not terrible? he exclaimed suddenly, stopping in his excited walk, and looking me in the face with an expression I shall never forget.

What could I say? I mattered somethingwhat it was I know not-my heart was full. It

But she will discover at last that there is no hope, and then how terrible the blow! It will break her heart. Oh! God, he continued frantically, "if this could only have been spared me. Marypoor sweet Mary," and leaning upon his hand, his whole frame shook convulsively with his emotions. It was a fearful sight to see a strong man thus bowed in agony; an agony more for another's sufferings than for his own.

I draw a veil over the rest of that day's record and pass by several pages of my port-folio. Rwas inexorable, and though every effort was made to avert calamity, it soon became evident that it would be long before he relented.

CERTIFICATES. Dear Sir.—I have used one of your Cooking Stoves, in my family for some time past. The Stove is all that you have recommended it to be and I feel it my duty to state that consider tone of the most important inventions within my knowledge. Being simple in construction and concenient in form I deem it to be a durable, and well calcutied Stove. From the fact that I believe it would save the ice of the Stove in fuel in one year in addition to the day concentraces which this stove possesses over all old stoves in use, I have no hesitation in recommending it in ecuniary point of view to every one, wheth Woodstock, Vt., June 14th 1840.

REFORMED AMERICAN PRACTICE OF MEDICINE.

TO those who are unacquainted with the system, the subscriber would inform them that the Reformed practice was instituted, and a Medical school established in the city of New York, in 1822, by W. Beach, M. D. and now President of the Reformed Medical Society of the U. States—Dr. B. established a board of professors in this school on the branches of medicine, viz. Anatomy, Physiology, Surgery, Chemistry, Materia Medica, Botany, Obstetries, Theory and Practice of Physic, and Medical Juris pradence, which were as scientifically taught and demonstrated as at Theory and Practice of Physic, and Medical Jurisprudence, which were as scientifically taught and demonstrated as all any Medical college in the country. In this practice, no Calonacl or other poisonous mineral is administered; but the Vegetable Kingdom is wholly relied on to cure or rejecte the sufferings of mankind. About 1928, a grant for a College was obtained from the Legislature of Ohio, which soon went into successful operation, at Worthington in that state, and still flourishes almost without a parallel in the history of any institution. This practice has nearly in that state, suppligated the Mineral practice, as well as N. York and other States. This practice is different from all others, from the fact that it is continually improving and as discusses and climates change to a certain degree, this practice varies accordingly. Why not reform or improve the practice of medicine as well as any other art or science. The tice of medicine as well as any other art or science? time of medicine as well as any other art or science? The Moseral Practice has had no important improvement for haif a century; and almost all vegetable practitioners of the day are very much in want of scientific knowledge in Anatomy, Surgery, etc. But the Reformed Practice embraces the good of all systems now in vogue, in this country. The subscriber is a gradient of the Reformed Practice as well as the Old School and knows from an exterioner of more than eight years, that the vegetable practice is more side and scientific than the nineral, and fully believes were the present adherents of that practice, acquainted practically with this extensive Vegetable practice, they would willingly by aside their minerals; and common would willingly 'ay aside their minerals; and common charity prompts me to say it. Dr. H. was an office stu-dent of Dr. Reach, and for more than three years in New York city had his able counsels and consultations on pr tients, on most every disease incident to a dense popul-tion. I feel warranted in asying that Dr. Beach has not rived as an author and practitioner in America. He h-lead five gold medals awarded him as a medical autho from different societies, (what no other physician ever re ceived in the country.) The improvements and discoveries that are vearly made in this reformed Medical Society has abserved that families who have kept his medicines for see, seldom need a physician for mivice. Dr. Hibbard has throught best to have some of his medicines kept for sale in the principal fowns in this state, that the inhabitants generally might have a fair opportunity to test the superiority of these medicines for family use. Fifty cents, or one dollar, judiciously expended, may prevent a long, linguing, and perhaps fatal disorder; let it become once seated in the extent, and handreds extended may not even procure and perhaps fatal disorder; let it become once scated in the system, and hundreds expended may not even procure one moment of rest. The present era is an age of transi-tion. The practice of physic, is experimental—physicans are beginning to acknowledge it, and to net upon it. They have discovered that in the treatment of discuse (and there is no discuse for the cure of which an all-wise Provi-dence has not provided ample remedies in the storchouse of nature.) they must avail themselves, to be successful, of we remedies which operate in unison with the animal enoug-with the arrangements of the constitution of the it invariably lays the foundation for a distressing complain abitual weakness, nervous timidity, unhealthy action of the animal organs, or your most the subject a burden to the animal organs or a constitutional tendency to Mh-aith continued through life, rendering the subject a burden to himself and his friends. The most respectable and intelli-gent phy siccans of the times, are adopting this mode of prac-tice; for proof of which, we publish the following extract of a letter addressed to Dr. Hibbard, by a physician of high standing in the state of Marke.

of a letter addressed to Dr. Hibbard, by a physician of high standing in the state of Maine:

Fatract of a letter from Dr. J. P. Alden, Belfast, Me.
Dr. Hibbard-Sir: Being somewhat acquainted with the principles of the Reformed practice, as taught in Ohio, and being fully convinced of its superior efficacy in com-batting disease. I have availed invisely of this, as the only means I could devise to obtain further information on the subject, and to learn on what conditions the agency for the sale of the medicine in this state can be presented. About sale of the medicine in this state can be procured. Abou 20 years since I received a Medical Diploma, since which I have been established in practice in this town, and, if I am not mistaken, with as much satisfaction to my enployers as generally falls to the lot of physicians in this vicinity. But however satisfactory to others, it has failed altogether in being satisfactory to myself; and if there is any system by which disease can be subdued, without, at the same time, destroying or essentially injuring the regular and healthy action of the system. I would most willingly avail myself of it. I am of the opinion that the medicine and the practice would be favorably received in this quarter. In the treatment of disease, I have long since learned with deep regret the inefficiency of the Minkhall Practice.

I HERRRY CLATTEY BAB IN y daughter has been afflicted with sick head ache for the space of about 20 years,—the attacks occurring once in about two weeks, frequently lasting 24 hours, during which time the paroxysms have been so severe, as apparently soon to deprive her of life.—And after having tried almost all other remedies in vain, I have been induced as a last resort to try Spohn's Headache Remedy as sold by you and to the great disappointment and joy of herself and all her friends found very material relief from the first dose of the medecine. She has followed up the directions with the article, and in every case when an attack was threatened has found immediate case when an attack was threatened has found immedia relief, until she is near permanently cared. The attacks are now very seldom, and disappear almost immediately after taking the quantity directed. A hope that others may be beneficited by the use of this truly invaluable medicine, has induced meto send you the above, and remain some of which have been published, testifying to the permanent cure, and others to immediate relief given by this remedy. It affords relief to the afflicted in 15 or 20 minutes from the first dose. If taken when the symptoms of an attack are first felt, it prevents the further progress of the complaint, and can produce no danger at any time by an excessive dose; as in such a case it would only throw off the contents of the stomach, leaving it sweet and heathy with an excellent appetite. All afflicted with headache should not fail to procure the article, and relieve themselves from so distressing a complaint.

Physicians have in many instances given it to their patients, and in every instance, to our knowledge, with great satisfaction have found it a certain cure. Sick and Nervous Headache is a complaint with which physicians do not wish to have any thing to do, and generally prescribe only for temporary relief; consequently, Dr. Spohn's Sick Headache Remedy escapes the opposition which some other proprietory articles meet from that source.
